Architecture

A message from the Coordinator

The Architecture Room at the RA Summer Exhibition 2020 will consider architecture through the expression of “Climate and Geography (or vice versa)” focusing on the context: site, geography, climate, political climate, people, community and culture.

As architects and designers, we tend to see climate and geography as forces to be contended with, to be adapted to, but in truth these are flexible forces. Climate and geography create a set of progressively changing physical and societal conditions, and it is in these conditions that architecture – regardless of its philosophical origins – has to take its place and adapt its identity. What can it accomplish when it effectively and sensitively responds to a situation – and to the planet – at a certain moment?

Submissions should demonstrate thoughts, awareness or responses to the context through architectural models, visual projections and other material.
