A message from the Architecture Co-ordinator

Interconnectedness

Architects are familiar with interconnectedness and entanglement. As professionals we have to weave within the structures, processes and desires of our society. Architecture does not come out of the brief for a building, but from a profound understanding of the overall task. Most of us are deeply implicated in the destructive commodification of the entire world, while trying hard to guide society's good realisation of itself.

In response to Interconnectedness, I would like to ask that architectural entries consider the related theme of 'Ways of Living'. This to me means housing and houses, but also the interconnectedness within ecosystems and visions of urban life.

As a teacher myself, I would like to see more submissions from Schools of Architecture.
